A New, Wonderful and Useful Invention,
CALLED A

Tidal Power,

Has been discovered at the expense of many years study and experiment which will revolutionize the method of obtaining power for driving machinery of all kinds
All ough this power is obtained from the rise and fall of the tides machinery can be driven at a long distance from the seat of power with this invention by means of a wire rope which is now in common use for similar purposes
This Machinery is so simple and occupies so little room that it can be erected on any wharf and the expense of the Machinery very trifling compared to other power
It will run for years without any expense and without any person to tend it the power being continuously obtained night and day If desired a common sewing being sufficient to drive light machinery
This power can easily and effectually be applied to ring Fog Bells, saving the Government thousands of dollars yearly, needing no attention after being once set in motion
The principle by which a continuous motion of the Main Shaft is insured in a given direction, can also be applied to Sewing Machines and prevent the possibility of the machine changing to the troublesome backward motion which breaks the thread, by using this process on Sewing Machines, both hands of the operator are entirely at liberty to hold the work Children can run them without trouble
In manufacturing Sewing Machines for the future the Balance Wheels can be entirely dispensed with consequently making a great saving in the manufacturing This principle can be applied to every machine at a trifling cost
The application of this principle can also be made to foot Lathes the motion of the foot being hardly perceptible and more speed attained than with the crank It also saves the motion of the body when propelling the machine, and favors the ankle
The "Close Treadle" for Sewing Machines constructed to embody the above named principle and capable of being applied to sewing machines of any size kind or shape are now being manufactured and in a few days may be seen, at the clothing store of J C Smart on Exchange Street, in operation attached to a sewing machine from the manufactory of B F Howe, successor to the late A B Howe the originator of the "Improved Howe Sewing Machine"
A license to manufacture and sell ten thousand of the Close Treadle" having been granted to A F Kimball, agent for the "Improved Howe Sewing Machine he will immediately introduce them to this market through his agents, who will apply them to machines of any manufacture at prices to [illegible] that every person owning a Sewing Machine will be able to have one.
It is a useful and valuable invention, and is worthy of the investigation of all scientific men
Letters Patent were issued, for this Invention, dated December 27th, 1870, obtained through the agency of Fred H Coombs of this City

THE TENNESSEE SAFE!

The announcement of the safe arrival of the Tennessee at San Domingo will be grateful news to all and especially to the friends and relatives who have suffered so much anxiety as to the fate of those on board. We have become so used to receiving rapid intelligence from nearly every part of the world that it is difficult to appreciate the natural delay in getting advices from localities not connected with the great international telegraphic system and the length of time elapsing in this instance without news was so disproportioned to the short trip taken that popular impatience has been stimulated from uneasiness to fear and doubt to despair. There has been some justification for anxiety as hardly of such time would elapse without intelligence but the serious aspect of the case has been greatly exaggerated by sensational speeches and newspaper comments which have used the doubt as to the fate of the Tennessee to point a moral or adorn a tale regardless of the feelings of those who have had the most intense interest in the subject so carelessly discussed.

Now we are only informed by a telegram that news has been received in New York by a late steamer of the safe arrival of the Tennessee at San Domingo, giving no particulars or dates. We shall not be surprised therefore to learn that the vessel encountered rough weather and that while the press has been discussing the probable fate of the Commissioners they have been pursuing their investigations with an industrious unconsciousness of the sensational obituary notices which have been so liberally bestowed upon them by the daily papers. By the time this reaches our readers later news will give us some of the perplexing details of the trip and if the voyage has been made without unusual incident the papers which have tried the hardest to sink the expedition will come to us by the next mail with assurances of their unwavering confidence in its safety and their utter disregard of the idle rumors of disaster.

We are thankful to learn of the Tennessee's arrival not only because of the distinguished character of the party, nor solely from sympathy with the voyagers and their anxious friends but because her unexplained loss would have been charged to national inefficiency and in the light of the charges openly preferred would have been regarded as a wanton sacrifice of life to the incompetency of our Navy. For the United States government to be unable to furnish safe transportation hence to the West Indies to a delegation of citizens invited to its service would, in the absence of positive knowledge of the unavoidability of the disaster have been regarded as a lasting disgrace to a nation which has in the past taken the lead of the world in maritime science and skill. Not that the loss of a naval vessel necessarily proves incompetence for better vessels than the Tennessee have gone down beneath the feet of as able seamen as ever trod a quarter-deck, but the reflections which have been cast upon the construction and re-construction of this vessel together with charges of the general mismanagement of the service have been such that the public would refuse to believe that her loss resulted from causes beyond control.

Her arrival however, has by no means demonstrated that the Tennessee is free from the imperfections attributed to her and the investigation of the truth of the rumors in circulation may be quite as profitably carried on although the safety of her company has divested the subject of a tragic interest. The assertions of Mr Banks in the recent debate in the House contained serious imputations upon the authorities who devised and superintended the construction and alteration of this vessel and if his remarks were based as alleged upon the professional opinion of so experienced a builder as Mr Hanscom who has been reinstated in the Department they warrant a searching inquiry. No amount of hostility to Admiral Porter would justify a member in bringing such charges at such a time without solid foundation and General Banks owes it to himself to prove that he was impelled by a higher purpose than that of seizing upon the probable occurrence of a public calamity to indulge in a personal spite.

We so far agree with his views as to believe that the influence of our present Admiral has been the reverse of beneficial to the Navy and that a thorough overhauling of the system would result in exposing many sources of inefficiency and useless expense — but no single branch of the service can be charged with a monopoly of the evils, and any criticism which fails to include every department of our national marine as now conducted will fall short of the occasion. The developments would hardly make capital for either side of the Line and Staff controversy for red tape and the mustiness of bureau theories will be found to permeate every part of the service. Practical skill and emancipation from the rigidity of precedent is everywhere required. Our Navy is about all that we have left of a once magnificent marine; we have at hand the genius and skill which can make it a model for the world, and its reputation should be so thoroughly established for excellence in all its details, material and personal, that it will be impossible in the future to make a few days' delay of intelligence a pretext for startling the whole country by plausible allegations of its utter demoralization and decay.

We learn from the Kennebec Journal that Hon Wm T Johnson of Augusta was summoned to Boston on Saturday, by a telegram announcing the alarming and dangerous sickness of his friend William H Wheeler, Esq, formerly of that city, but more recently a resident of Bangor, where, during nearly fifteen years he presided very ably and gracefully over the editorial columns of the WHIG AND COURIER. Mr Wheeler has not enjoyed perfect health for some time past, but we were previously unaware of his serious illness and his many friends in this city and in the State will share our painful surprise at the intelligence and join us in the hope that the danger may be averted, and that the invalid may be restored to health to enjoy for many years the companionship of his family and the large circle of friends who hold him in such high esteem.

THE WASHINGTON CARNIVAL The Carnival in Washington commenced on Monday, Pennsylvania Avenue being crowded with citizens and strangers at an early hour. The houses from 15th St., to the Capitol were decked with flags, evergreens and emblems, business was generally suspended and the whole population seemed to have joined in the throng. No such immense concourse has ever been witnessed in that city before except on Presidential Inauguration Days. Bands of music were stationed at different points in the Avenue, and the great stand on Market House Square was occupied by members of Congress and their families. The programme opened with trials of speed between fast horses, and subsequently the avenue was crowded with equipages of those out pleasure riding. In the afternoon there was a grand civic parade on foot followed by wheelbarrow races, &c., &c.

PAYING OFF THE PUBLIC DEBT

NEW YORK, Feb. 13th, 1871.

To the Editor of the Whig & Courier

We are now manifestly in the immediate presence of the question, whether our National debt is to be treated as a permanent institution, or whether, following the precedents of our ancestors in their treatment of the debts of the Revolution and of the war of 1812-15, we are to put the pecuniary obligations growing out of the Great Rebellion, in the course of a gradual, but steady and sure liquidation.

Mr Boutwell has recently submitted to the Financial Committee of the House, the basis of his estimate that with the Revenue laws as they now stand, the surplus revenue for the year ending June 30th, 1872, will not exceed ten millions, but this, of course is after providing (say) twenty five millions under the Acts relating to the sinking fund.

The actual surplus for December and January last was six and one fourth millions, or at the rate of thirty-seven and one-half millions for the year or, after meeting the requirements of the sinking fund, twelve and one half millions for the year. But it is to be considered that the customs revenue of last month was extraordinary, being fully two millions in excess of January, 1870. The cause of this sudden and great enlargement, was doubtless the rush of imports which had been kept back to take advantage of the diminished tariff which came into operation January 1st 1871. But whatever may have been the cause of this exceptional revenue for January, it clearly cannot be relied upon as an indication of the year.

The income tax, producing twelve or fourteen millions expires by its own limitation in two years, and after that no surplus remains, beyond the requirements of the sinking fund.

Those who talk and write so glibly about enormous excesses of revenue and about the two hundred millions of debt paid off in the first two years of Gen Grant's administration, forget to notice the reductions of taxes to the amount of eighty millions have just gone into operation, and that it is now really doubtful if ever the good faith of our sinking fund Acts can be maintained.

For myself I hold fast to the doctrine of the fathers, that National power and even security and defence depend upon freedom from debt and that if we have incurred one whether wisely or recklessly the sooner we get rid of it the better.

Frederick the Great, created Prussia upon the theory of owing nothing and it was because his successors have been true to his policy that the Prussia of our day found itself unhampered by debt and therefore capable of the prodigious displays of strength which are now amazing and confounding the world.

We succeeded in putting down the Great Rebellion only because we commenced upon the work with the resources of credit untouched, and completely available.

Mr Sumner is reported to have said within two years when aid was proposed for the patriots in Cuba that we could not now undertake a war even with such a power as Spain, without the risk of bringing on financial convulsions which might be fatal to us. Mr Sumner may or may not have seen fit to say so much as that, but he is too sensible a man not to have seen that the fact was so and not to have been influenced by it.

Within the last half dozen years, we have talked about a war with England and especially when it was desirable to conciliate the Irish vote. The presentation of our little bill of the Alabama Claims, and its collection at the point of the bayonet have even been embodied in the resolutions of political conventions. But everybody who knows anything knows that a war with any first class power would swamp our national credit strained as it now is and with it, our currency discount banks savings banks and even insurance companies on life and property and is utterly out of the question in any respect.

It may be said that England is powerful notwithstanding her debt. That would have been said one year ago much more confidently than now. England to-day has ceased and visibly to the eye of mankind, to be a first class power, and is at this moment debating the question of field works for the defence of London. Her financial necessities disable her from keeping up even a respectable military establishment and so tie her down to a pacific policy under all circumstances, that she counts for nothing in European politics. Russia has not hesitated to abrogate the treaty of Paris in the most contemptuous and peremptory style, and when the time comes Germany will swallow Holland and come out to the North Sea, and another Van Tromp will sweep the British Channel. With half her means engulfed by the interest account of her national debt, England is drifting helplessly along already an object of contempt and soon to pay the penalty of weakness by becoming an object of ...

By resolutely paying what we owe, we can borrow another twenty-five hundred millions of dollars when a sufficient occasion shall arise for it and the capacity to command such a sum upon our credit, is equivalent, for all purposes of security to having it piled up in our vaults. It is a power we had when the Great Rebellion broke out and it is a power we can have again, if we choose. It is a power much better worth having, than a landy army or rotten navy yards.

G M W

[We agree fully with our correspondent that the credit of a nation, as of an individual is naturally stronger when out of debt, and we presume he will agree with us, that it is advantageous to keep out of debt altogether. As we have the debt on hand, however, the interesting question is how to pay it off honestly with the least damage to either the credit or the prosperity of the country. So far as G M W advocates a steady but judicious liquidation of the debt we coincide entirely, but we are not satisfied that the interest of the present or the coming generations will be subserved by overburdening all enterprise in the effort to lift at once, a load which can be more easily and justly shared to some extent by those who will receive the benefits of which it has been a small part of the price —ED]

The Secretary of the U S Legation at Madrid, sailed on Saturday for Washington, bearing special dispatches from Minister Sickles, which are understood to contain information of the entire and satisfactory settlement of all American claims arising out of the Cuban war and all controversies relating to same. The purchase of Cuba is not mooted, but it is believed Spain is now disposed to treat on that subject considerately.

The Toronto, Can, Leader commenting on Mr Howard's resolution recommending the High Commission to provide for the cession of British North America, says "The proposition is conceived in an offensive spirit and is of course quite inadmissible. We can assure our American neighbors that if they desire a closer relationship with the Dominion than at present existing, they are taking the very least means in their power of preventing its accomplishment, because insolvent propositions of this kind only provoke a bitter spirit of hostility in this country towards the United States."

It is reported that if Washington Market, in New York, should be removed, the ground would revert to Trinity Church. The plot was originally granted by the corporation of Trinity to the city authorities on condition that it should be used as a market forever, and that if the ground should be appropriated to any other purpose the title of the city would become null and void.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The total war contributions required by the Germans from the city of Paris have been advanced by the Bank of France.

Le Peuple Francaise, says "The pretensions put forward by the Duc D' Aumale and the Prince De Joinville have created an estrangement between them and the Count De Paris the sole rightful claimant of the Throne of France, and this may lead to rupture, unless powerful influences are exerted to prevent it."

The new French government has approved of a credit of three million francs for the public works.

Commercial affairs in Paris are recovering from the effect of the enforced seclusion of the city, and within the last few days trade has been very active.

It is reported that at the interview of Wednesday last, Bismarck admitted to Favre that it was only allowable to exact during the armistice contributions levied prior to Jan 28th. Dieppe therefore hopes the amounts exacted from her may be refunded.

Considerable feeling is shown in British diplomatic circles at the official announcement from Berlin of the refusal of the Prussian government to receive officially the last letter of Earl Granville urging peace.

A Versailles dispatch states that it is probable that the Emperor will abandon the idea of entering Paris, and that the troops will quit Paris with all possible promptitude, and evacuate France as soon as practicable after a sufficient guarantee has been given for the payment of an indemnity of £150,000,000 sterling.

The new French Ministry is composed as follows —President of Council, M Buffet, Minister of War, M Le Flo. Public Works M De Larcey. Instruction, M Simon. Commerce, M Lambrecht, Foreign Affairs, M Favre. Interior M Picard, Justice, M Dufoure. Marine M Jaugeuy.

Paris says a correspondent is resuming its natural appearance, and in a few days gas will again be used. The river boats have commenced running and traffic in the streets has begun. Carts are out but there are scarcely any cabs or carriages. The people too—and it is almost painful to witness it—are about to resume their wonted frivolities carelessness and gaiety, and already preparations are making for opening the dissolute gardens of the capital.

A New York dispatch announces the arrest in Brooklyn on Sunday of one Wilhelm Schutz who had an open knife in his pocket and is supposed to be the person who has been so frequently reported as stabbing women in the streets. A city paper, however, denounces the "mysterious stabbings" as sensational canard; the police authorities having been able to ascertain only one authentic case of such wounding and in that one, the injury was no more severe than might have been inflicted with a pin or a tooth pick.

TEMPERANCE MEETING AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL. The temperance organizations of Washington D C propose to observe Wednesday next Washington's birthday by a meeting in the afternoon in Lincoln Hall at which addresses will be made by Senators Wilson Wiley and Revels, Representatives Morrill and Maynard, Dr Rankin, Mr Drew and Mr Davis of Rhode Island. In the evening there will be two meetings, one at Lincoln Hall and one at Dr Sunderland's church on 7½ street. The meeting in Lincoln Hall will be addressed by Senator Patterson, Representatives Shanks and Lawrence, and Hon Amasa Walker, and that in the church by Senators Buckingham and Pomeroy, Representatives Hill and Cook, General Howard and Rev Drs Newman and Sunderland.

A meeting of the Missouri Association for the relief of the sufferers in France on Saturday night, adopted a resolution requesting the government to place a vessel at their disposal at New Orleans to convey the articles collected.

A letter from China states that a bridge giving away near Canton while two fire engines were upon it caused the loss of eighty or a hundred lives. Much indignation was manifested against the English engineers who constructed the bridge.

Exuberant Health

Is a blessing vouchsafed to few. Even those who have been favored by nature with strong constitutions and vigorous frames are apt to neglect the precautions necessary to preserve those precious endowments. Indeed as a rule, the more healthy a robust a man is the more liable he is to neglect to take with his own physique. It is the consolation of the naturally weak and feeble to know that they can be so invigorated and built up by a proper use of the means which science has placed at their disposal as to have a much better chance of long life and exemption from disease and pain than the most athletic. If their fellows who are foolish enough to suppose themselves invulnerable and act accordingly.

It is not too much to say that more than half the people of the civilized world need an occasional tonic to enable them to support the strain upon their bodies and brains which the fast life of this restless age occasions. In fact a pure vegetable stimulating tonic is the grand desideratum of the day and the best, as millions ... have testified is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is a stimulant medicine ... It imparts permanent strength to weak systems and invigorates delicate constitutions. Its reputation and its sales have steadily increased. Competitive preparations have been introduced ... and as fast as they appeared have perished ... and this ... have been left far in the rear. It has been the great medical success of the present century and it is quite certain that no proprietary medicine in this country is as widely known or as generally sold.

The lightning presses running incessantly (Sundays excepted) the whole year through barely supply the demand for the Illustrated Almanac in which the nature and uses of the preparation are set forth. The circulation now being over eight millions a year.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington D C Jan 15 1871

His Excellency B Baez, President of the Republic of San Domingo

Sir—In accordance with the Joint Resolution of the two houses of Congress of the United States I have appointed three distinguished citizens of the United States to wit: Hon Benjamin Wade for many years a Senator President A D White of Cornell University and Dr S G Howe distinguished for his philanthropy learning and services in relieving the blind of much of the monotony of life and to their affections by opening to them the world of letters—as a Commission to visit the Republic of San Domingo and to collate the information called for by the resolution in Associated with the Commission is Hon Allen of Boston, Secretary to the same, a gentleman who has honored his country by serving in a diplomatic capacity I beg to introduce these gentlemen and to ask for them your kind wishes

With great respect, your obedient servant,
[illegible] U S GRANT

Baez replied "Gentlemen, I have received with much pleasure the autograph note with His Excellency President Grant has sent me through so highly appreciated me. I understand that your mission or [illegible] by the United States is one absolutely of peace This is the aspiration and object of the republic One of the great motives which has produced these negotiations is that of the development of its riches by means of labor, and to so guarantee the exercise of liberty and the property of citizens you may count on the most ample and absolute liberty in exercising your commission—The government offers whatever data (you may consider necessary and will take special pleasure in giving you every satisfaction. In making your investigations as to the sponsality of the resolution of the Dominican people we desire ardently that you will consult not only the immense majority in favor of annexation, but also those who are opposed to it."

The above is the official translation of the speech After formal speeches the interview took the form of question and answer. Baez asserted that the opposition to annexation was not with the Dominicans but with the Haytiens. Cabral had no Dominicans to support him worthy of notice. The fact he was not in command of the forces commonly styled his. The officers were Haytiens and the whole life of the movement was in the Haytien authorities. Mr Wade said here that such statements were so at variance with commonly received opinions in the United States that he felt constrained to ask whether it could be justified upon. Baez replied that it was entirely accurate and to show a basis for it produced official letters giving detailed information of engagements made with the Hay ien for an incursion nominally under Cabral

While the Commission was here, for the purpose of influencing its opinions, the case made out by Baez certainly showed deep hostility on the part of Hayti to Baez and his plans The force with which Cabral is, Baez gave as one regiment only and that there was prospect that one or two more were about to join him His real position is about six miles east of Azuan and he has constantly been among the Haytien border Even the Dominicans near him have taken no part, but fallen back as he advanced Baez expressed great confidence that he had not over rated the desire of the people for annexation, but hoped that the Commissioners would question freely on that point in all directions

A second and less formal meeting was arranged at Baez's house

Small parties of the Scientific corps will be sent into the country from here in various directions The Commission is proceeding in a very unostentatious way and is very industrious It will report what it sees and discovers bearing upon the questions embraced in the Senate resolution but will express no opinion upon the policy of annexation

What was seen of the people around Samana was of little consequence compared with the investigation into the value of the place as a naval station All seemed to agree that the present condition of the finances would justify it and that the harbor where the coaling station should be obtained by our government by lease or purchase. The result investigation into the views and disposition of the people and the resources of the country will begin here It is the present intention to go from here some time next week to Azuan and visit the region around Ozama thence proceed to the north side of the Island, probably stopping at Fort au Prince for one or two days, if deemed desirable from [illegible] to Hayti or some point near either the Commission or small parties will visit the great cities Thus far the problems which seem to be the most important are the difficulty of the assimilation of such a mass of population the question whether our system of taxation would be submitted to whether a warm Haytian would not soon follow and whether our Treasury just now can stand the large appropriation which the annexation would require immediately

The report of the Commission will hardly be ready for submission to Congress before the last of March or ten days after the arrival of the Commission in Washington

SENATOR SUMNER CONVALESCENT.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20

Mr Sumner's condition is not so dangerous as reported On Saturday he suffered severely for two or three hours with acute pains, but his physician at no time considered him in a critical condition. To-day he has almost entirely recovered, but as a matter of safety his physicians deem it best for him to remain in his room a short time.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS

THIRD SESSION.

WASHINGTON Feb 20

SENATE

The Senate met at 11 a m, when a motion to adjourn was defeated

Mr Conkling from the Judiciary Com, reported favorably on the House bill to guard the purity of elections He said this was a bill to defend the ballot box against fraud and piracy and he gave notice that he would soon ask the attention of the Senate to it and would then appeal to the friends of the bill to stand by it until a vote was reached

Mr Sawyer from the Com on Education and Labor asked that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the resolutions of the Mississippi Legislature recently presented by Mr Revels for a national printing house and institution for the blind

The committee was discharged, and after a discussion upon Mr Anthony's resolution to print an extract of the copies of the report of the Com on Education, Messrs Bayard and Davis opposing it the Senate took up the Legislative Appropriation bill, and the debate was continued upon concurring in an amendment reported from the Com of the Whole repealing the prohibition against pardons as evidence in the Court of Claims

HOUSE

Bills were introduced and referred as follows

By Mr Buffington of Mass resolutions of Mass in favor of ship owners of the United States

By Mr Burchard of Ill of free schools throughout the U S setting apart the proceeds of the sale of public lands for that purpose

By Mr Van Trump of Ohio, in relation to the New York Central R R Co and the tax of 5 per cent upon its issue reciting the facts in the case and requesting the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to endorse the collection of this sum by 1800

The bill reported from Com on Foreign Affairs on Friday last authorizing the President of the U S to appoint a Joint Commission to establish a North Western boundary line was taken up Mr Swann of Md, who, reporting the bill explained the necessity for its passage He replied to the objection of Mr Dawes of Mass on Friday and expressed his confidence in the estimates submitted fixing the cost at $500 000 He reminded the House how he had supported and applauded the movement of Mr Dawes in the famous Alabama claims case and he had only regretted that Mr Dawes had not gone further in that case and represented to the President the enormity of that transaction because the retention of such a man as the present Postmaster General in the Cabinet had been received with astonishment if not disgust by the whole people of the country

Mr Dawes stated that within fifteen years there had been expended in running the same boundary line $6 000 000 and would have been completed in one year it had not been for the private interest of a gigantic corporation which wanted to get under its control a width of 140 miles of territory, he believed that before the bill would become a law the question of the line should be run would be of no consequence

In reply to a question by Mr Swann, as to the behalf in the cession of Canada, Mr Dawes replied that he believed the whole matter would come up and could not be kept out of the deliberations of the High Commission It is not to be expected that the damages caused by Alabama would be compensated by the counting out of so many dollars

Mr Banks of Mass advocated the passage of the bill and expressed great doubt whether the High Commission would ever conclude that territory to the United States The bill was passed 142 to 7

The dispatch announcing the safety of the Tennessee was laid before the House by the Speaker and afford general satisfaction

Mr Dawes reported sundry civil service bills which were made the special order for to-morrow The bill appropriates about $4 000 000 including $4 000 000 for pensions under the recent law granting pensions to the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812

The House then proceeded to consider the report of the Judiciary Com on the McGrorarken Claim

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL

Sir Edward Thornton has rented the elegant residence of Franklin Phelps, on Franklin Square, for the use of the British Commissioners who are expected to arrive in Washington on Friday

In the Lower House of the Arkansas Legislature on Saturday articles of impeachment of Chief Justice McClure were adopted.

The Board of Visitors appointed by the President to attend the next annual examination at the Military Academy consists of Rev Dr Sunderland of Washington city, Rev Dr Vincent of Plainfield N J, ex-Governor Aiken of S C, Judge Miller of Tuscaloosa, Ala., Gen Isaac F Quimby of Rochester University of N Y, and Joseph J. Wood of Kansas.

The troubles between the Archbishop and Father Farrell of St. Joseph's Church, New York city, growing out of Farrell's letter in reference to Italian Unity, have been satisfactorily adjusted and Farrell will not be removed. At the services on Sunday, Father Farrell said. "Man may adore devoutly before the altar of God and worship enthusiastically before the shrine of liberty While loving my religion more than life, I will ever under the guidance of that religion hate tyranny, oppression, injustice and wrong, and give my sympathy and assistance to the oppressed, afflicted and wronged the world over."

A hurricane visited Friday night, in Joyce and damaged a mill or two. Lewiston was left by the recent fire in Hotel, Auburn, also suffered, a widow was fatally injured and her little son instantly killed.

BUSINESS ITEMS.

IMPORTANT TO BONDHOLDERS. By the conditions expressed in the bonds the U S Government has the right to call in and redeem its 5-20 Bonds any time after five years from the date of each issue. The issues of 1862, 1864, and 1865, are now redeemable, and the Government is about to avail itself of its privilege by redeeming them in gold at par—giving to holders of the bonds the option of taking gold, or new Five (5) per cent Gold Bond at value of par in gold,—in exchange for 5-20's These new 5 per cent. Bonds will thus cost a premium of 10 to 12 per cent in currency, (the value of gold)

In preference to either method, very many holders of Government Bonds are taking advantage of the low price at which the Maine Central R R Extension Bonds can at present be purchased, and are exchanging Government Bonds (for which the latest quotations are paid) for these securities which are sound and first class in every respect The M C R R Extension Bonds are secured by a FIRST and ONLY Mortgage on the Extension from Danville Junction to Cumberland,—besides being a lien upon the entire line and property of this great and prosperous Corporation To ensure the early completion of this important and profitable link of road, the Bonds are being sold at the very low price of Ninety (90) and accrued interest in Currency and the remarkably rapid sale made since they were put into market on January 1st, show that investors are quick to improve the opportunity of obtaining such thoroughly sound securities at so low a price They pay 6% per cent. (in gold) per annum—now equal to nearly 7½ per cent in currency, or present cost Government per cent Gold Bonds, costing the present Gold, (111) pay but 44 per cent (in Gold) per annum while costing some $200 on each thousand more than M C R R Extension Bonds These and many other considerations are causing the remainder of the issue to be rapidly taken and when once all sold from the Agent's hands these desirable securities cannot be obtained except at a material advance from present price

"Let's go over and cut out Harry Fane," [illegible] said Percy Pomfret, the wildest most harum scarum of our Christ Church set. "You know Lady L., Neilson, don't you? She always sweet upon you Yankees. Come, perhaps the Signorina will make it as lively for us as she does for Harry. By Jove! he is the most miserable dog living." And one by one we filed one by one into the box, and were duly presented to the "Signorina Angela del Vale." Harry Fane looked as if [illegible] would liked to shoot every one of us.

From the year of our matriculation at Oxford Harry Fane and I had been the closest [illegible] and of all the men I had ever known, [illegible] was the most jovial, rattling, generous and kind hearted—in short, the most thoroughly "good fellow." Courteous and gallant with the ladies but without the slightest weakness for falling in love. Henry's frank address and lively manner made him a general favorite. I was therefore not a little surprised to see him with a cloud of care upon his face, and a look of unmistakable annoyance at seeing us.

"What a brilliant house!" said Lady L., as, after making my bow to the Signorina, I seated myself beside her. "How does it look to your republican eyes, Mr. Neilson?"

"Almost too dazzling," was my commonplace rejoinder. "I am bewildered, I may say intoxicated with beauty."

Of which our box can boast a fair proportion, don't you think?" continued her ladyship in a low tone, glancing towards the young Italian who was keeping up a lively conversation with Pomfret, while Harry Fane sat scowling in the background.

"Beautiful as a starlight night," I replied, in answer to her glance rather than her words. "You show yourself a real benefactor to humanity, by bringing this lovely exotic from the land of song."

"She is a daughter of a Tuscan nobleman, you know," continued Lady L., "and as good and clever as she is beautiful. I love her as if she were my own child, and it will be a hard struggle for me to send her back to her father. The other Italians have no homes to keep their women in, and very little heart either. But see, the royal party are about retiring. What a fascinating creature the Empress is!"

And rising as she spoke, we stood gazing longingly after Eugenie's graceful figure, as she preceded the Queen out of the box.

When the crowd had become somewhat less, I offered my arm to Lady L., and in company with Percy Pomfret escorted her and the Signorina to their carriage, which already stopped the way. Then, after making my parting bow, I looked about for Harry, but he was nowhere to be seen, and concluding that he wished to avoid the unmerciful chaffing he was sure to get from the fellows of our party, I soon gave up the search and joined Pomfret and Chichester in a round of looking in at the balls and routs to which we were bid den.

Two o'clock A. M. found me trying to force my way up Mrs. K.'s flower decked staircase, an enterprise which was so far crowned with success as to enable me to get to the first landing, and no further. So I turned into a dimly lighted conservatory which opened off the landing and which I found led into other greenhouses, whose comparative silence and darkness offered irresistible attractions to my weary eyes and ears. Avoiding as much as possible the neighborhood of the huge palms and friendly orange trees, which I knew from the murmur of voices sheltered many a loving pair, I sat down at last in the most remote spot I could find, devoutly thanking Heaven for a respite however brief from noise, light and glitter.

As I sat there quite hidden by a bower of [illegible] white camelias I heard voices [illegible] and before I could make my presence known I was aware that the Signorina Angela and Harry Fane were on the other side of my leafy screen.

"Indeed, Signor," said the sweet voice of the Italian in very good English but with a slight foreign accent, "you flatter me too much. I cannot believe that one whom you have known so short a time can be so [illegible] to your happiness."

"Listen one more moment, Signorina," said the voice of my friend, and the depth of feeling in his tone betrayed to me how much of his life and happiness he had staked on his chance of success with this woman. "From the first moment that I saw you I have loved you; every hour strengthens and deepens my love. There is [illegible] ask that I am not ready to [illegible] no sacrifice you can demand that I will not make for your sake."

"I demand no sacrifice, Signor. I will [illegible]," replied the girl, and her voice was low and very sad as she spoke the words. "I thank you for your kind thoughts, and if we had met earlier perhaps it might have been, but I am not quite free to listen to words of love. Since my childhood I have been betrothed to one of my own people —my father's choice for me. It is true—but not the less binding on that account. Good night, Signor, and God bless you."

She was gone before Harry could reply, and the same moment I felt my hand [illegible] and a [illegible] whispered:

"I was here accidentally, dear old fellow, and heard it all. Go home now and rest. I'll be with you at breakfast tomorrow morning and we'll talk this accursed matter over with our mature [illegible]."

He was ghastly pale, but pressed my hand and with a feeble attempt at a smile answered:

"All right, old fellow, and cigars at one," and then disappeared through a side door which led by a flight of stone steps into the garden.

II

Harry Fane's chambers in Piccadilly were the most luxurious of bachelor departments. Three large, heavily curtained windows overlooked the Green Park, and the sitting room was a delightful medley of mirrors, softly tufted chairs and sofas, pictures, tiger skins, cartridge boxes, breech loaders, curb chains, hunting flasks, cigar holders and meerschaums of every variety of shape and color.

I found [illegible] at the breakfast table [illegible] over a [illegible] note and letters.

"How are you, old fellow?" he called out in a cheery voice. "Been in bed yet? I have begun to think sleep's a popular delusion. I get on just as well without it. Coffee or tea? Help yourself. Never take Bravo in the breakfast—it bores one so. I say Neil[son] [illegible] I poured out a cup of coffee and lit my cigar, [illegible] our [illegible] I was happy man. Will [illegible]."

"[illegible]"

"I was sorry that [illegible] last night," [illegible] Harry's honest blue eyes looked so reproachfully at me and he shook his head with such a mournful [illegible].

"It's not that sort of a thing, Neilson," he said. "You don't understand me quite. I'm past thirty, and I never cared for a woman before, as you know very well, old chum. I'd care for this one, and as she cannot be anything to me, I can't help feeling it a bit [illegible]."

"But why bless [illegible] my dear boy? If I knew anything of the vibrations of a woman's voice there was something tugging at the Signorina's heart strings when she uttered that soft 'no' last night. Coquetry, Harry [illegible] more. Go and see her this morning and you'll come away the happiest [illegible] in England, I'll be bound."

But Harry did not seem to find so much encouragement in my view of the matter as I had expected. On the contrary, he passed his hand through his short light curls until they fairly stood on end and paced up and down the room with a [illegible] disturbed expression on his handsome face which surprised and puzzled me.

"It isn't that, Will; it isn't that. I believe that Angela cares for me. I've [illegible] enough to know the signs you see, and I [illegible], but I am quite certain I could make her. But there's another drawback, old chum—a fearful insurmountable obstacle, which I've wanted to tell you but never could—I'm already [married]."

[illegible] I had lived a good while in the world and seen it under most of its phases and aspects, consequently surprise was rather an unusual emotion with me, but I frankly confess that I was completely stupefied at Harry's announcement. Confused recollections of all night larks with Mary Ann, the pretty barmaid at the Blue Post, of all the women I had ever known Harry to flirt with, rushed through my brain only to increase my bewilderment. Since we turned our backs upon Oxford six years before Harry and I had hardly been separated for a day. I had been home for a twelvemonth's visit, but Harry had gone with me, and we had made the tour of Canada and the United States together. During all that time I had never heard of his having an entanglement; and if any one had told me that there was an incident of Harry Fane's life or even a thought of his heart, with which I was not familiar, I should have repudiated the idea with disdain. It was impossible to doubt his sanity, and yet for a moment I almost feared that his reason was unsettled.

"It can't be true, Harry," I said, "you must be either mad or dreaming."

"True, my dear fellow! I wish I could think it was not," he replied. "In all these years, and it's nearly ten since the accursed net was thrown around me, I've never really felt it until now, but take another weed, old fellow, and I'll tell you the tale as briefly and as calmly as I can.

"You know, of course, that my mother was a Spanish woman, and that I was born in Cadiz. My father's estate in this country had been completely eaten up by the extravagance of his predecessors, my grandfather having even sold the entail to cover his liabilities. My mother's family belonged to the old grandees of Spain, and were immensely rich. She ran away with my father, I believe, and there was a great row, which all ended happily as the young couple were forgiven and taken back by the outraged parent. I was their only child, and, after the accursed custom of that country, was betrothed before I was out of long clothes to my cousin, the daughter of my mother's brother and the heiress of half of Andalusia. If they had only kept me in Spain, it wouldn't have signified so much, I might have been a respectable old Hidalgo by this time, smelling of garlic and smoking like an old chimney. But my father insisted upon sending me to England when I was only seven years old, and, as you know, I have been here almost ever since.

"When I was about twenty, and just ready for the university, I was sent for to come home and see my mother who was in a dying state. So I went, and found her bent upon being present at my marriage before she died. My gentle, beautiful mother! I can see her now, her dying eyes raised and looking into mine, with that wistful, anxious, imploring look which belongs only to those on the borders of the promised land, and which no man with a spark of generosity in him could withstand. She thought she was doing me a kindness. She thought my happiness for life would be secured if the great estate of the De Castros were united to our own. Poor mother! If she could see me now!

"Well, I consented, of course—who would not—and, to make a long story short, we were married in my father's private chapel in Cadiz, and I have never seen my wife from that day to this, and never will again with my own consent, so help me Heaven! If a divorce court can [illegible] the marriage, it shall be done. Do you think there's any chance? Say something to cheer me up, old fellow."

"This wife of yours, you haven't given a fair chance, my dear boy; you might have come to love her in time. As for a divorce in Spain and in the Romish communion, it is simply impossible. Do you remember her at all? What was she like?"

"An unfledged, unformed, but very promising Gorgon of twelve years old, my dear fellow. Length, leanness, and blackness are the only terms that will describe her. And such manners too! She fled from me as soon as the benediction was pronounced, and took refuge on the roof, I believe, or under ground where I wish she had been securely packed down and never risen up again to curse me with her hideous claim upon my name and freedom. God forgive me, but when I think of Angela, Will, I feel as if I should go mad."

He got up and paced the room with an expression of such genuine distress upon his honest face that my heart ached for him. But still I knew there was but one way out of the difficulty, but one certain road to peace and honor, and however rough that road might be, I should be doing him very false kindness by sowing seeds of hope where there was no space for hope to grow.

"Have you ever been home since that unlucky time, Harry?" I asked.

"Never, as you must know. My mother died the next day. My father still lives in Cadiz, and I often long to see the old man once more. He writes by every mail begging me to return. There is one of his letters just received," he added, tossing it across the table to me, "but the fear of being swooped down upon by my gorgon of a wife keeps me as far away as possible. Neilson, I must get a divorce from that woman. I'm sure she won't object, for I verily believe it was a case of hate at first sight on both sides. And now, Neilson, will you help me? Will you go over there, see my father, and come to some arrangement with him?"

"Harry, you know that I will do for you all that one man can do for another," I replied, "but take my advice, old fellow, and go yourself. Well, have your own way," I continued, as Harry shook his head impatiently and recommenced his hurried strides about the room. "I'll go if you wish it, though I'm rather green at meddling in other men's affairs. But I must make my own conditions, which are that you give me your word of honor not to see Angela again until you are a free man, and that you go to Lady L. to-day and tell her the whole truth."

"Pretty sharp remedy that, Will," replied he. "You can't be called a very tender hearted practitioner, but I know you are right, so if you'll grant me one more interview with Angela, just to exonerate myself, I'll go with you as far as Paris, and remain there until your return."

III

The [illegible] next morning took Harry and myself to Folkestone, and before noon on the following day we were eating our breakfast at Very's in the Palais Royal.

Harry's natural buoyancy of disposition made him a charming companion under any circumstances, and he was now so full of hope and confidence in the success of my mission that nothing I could say would make him look at the future from a common sense point of view. Angela, he assured me, had behaved most nobly—had implored him to forget her, to put her aside forever and turn to his allegiance to the wife who had the first claim upon his heart, and to the old father whom he had so sadly neglected during these many years.

"But I don't intend to take her advice all the same, my dear fellow," he went on, "for if everything else fails I'll go to Indiana and live for twelve months. That's a sure card, isn't it, Will?"

So we parted at the railway station where I had taken my ticket for Bayonne, whence I proposed to cross the Pyrenees to Madrid, and there with courier or guide to perform the rest of the journey on horseback. I had never seen Spain and, being by nature the most erratic and nomadic of mortals, I was only too glad to escape from the artificial atmosphere of London high life, and find myself among mountains, streams and rivulets once more.

My journey through Spain was delightful. I stopped long enough in Madrid, Seville and Granada to see all that was attractive in their art treasures or relics of past days, and had almost forgotten the unpleasant object of my coming, when a letter from Harry, which [illegible] awaiting me at the Fonda de la Europa at Cadiz, awakened me to the recollection of my mission and of its very [illegible] nature.

I found Mr. Fane's villa by the sea all that unlimited wealth combined with refinement and taste could make it. Large and lofty rooms exquisitely decorated and furnished, marble halls and vestibules in which fountains sent up their ever sparkling foam, parterres of rare and brilliant flowers, and afar off the blue and shining sea made up a home which realized all that I had ever dreamed of in the way of luxury and enjoyment. The silken curtains opposite to where I stood were drawn back, and one of the grandest old men I have ever seen entered.

Tall and commanding in person with the blue eyes and fair skin of his race, the only effect that southern life and climate had had upon him was to tone down his natural ruddiness of complexion thus producing an exterior of greater delicacy and refinement than is common among Englishmen of his age.

He met me with a cordial frankness which brought Harry to my mind; and after a few courteous inquiries about my journey a little desultory talk upon general subjects he led the conversation at once to his son and to the object of my coming.

He had received a letter from Harry that morning and he regretted, he said with high bred courtesy, that his son should have allowed his friend to take so long a journey when the whole matter could have been so easily arranged on paper. For my son should know me well enough to believe, Mr. Neilson, the old man continued with a slight tremor in his voice, that after the statement he makes to me in his letter, I am as anxious as he can be that his unhappy marriage should be dissolved. I propose to take advice this very day upon the subject, and if it costs me half my fortune he shall be a free man in less than three months time. I am an old man, sir, and hoped never to be ashamed of my own child, but Harry's absence and neglect during all these past years betray a want of principle and good feeling which I should have thought impossible in one of my own blood."

"But consider, my dear sir," I said, "how this unfortunate marriage was forced upon your son and how unsuited the lady seems to his nature and requirements."

"The lady, sir!" interrupted Mr. Fane in an excited tone, "is all that is most noble and amiable, as far superior to her husband as the sun is brighter than the moon. For her sake far more than for his I should wish the marriage to be annulled."

I made a feeble attempt to say a few words in vindication of my friend, but the old man had so completely disarmed me by his ready acquiescence with his son's views, and I felt so thoroughly ashamed of my mission, and even of the motive that had prompted it, that my one desire was to bring the interview to an end as speedily as possible.

As I rose Mr. Fane rose also, and after apologizing with frigid politeness for his want of hospitality in not urging me to prolong my stay, he added:

"My niece's indisposition makes it impossible for me to receive visitors at present, but I purpose being in London early in July, and trust that I shall have the pleasure of seeing you at dinner, Mr. Neilson, on the 14th of that month at the Clarendon Hotel. Your long intimacy with Harry, and the kindly interest you have manifested in his happiness, make it proper that you should be present at his first and last interview with his wife. For I exact from my son that he should see his cousin once again before the tie that binds them together is severed. Will you tell Harry this for me?"

If ever a man felt disposed to blot out the word "friendship" from his vocabulary, and to spend the remainder of his life in severe isolation from his fellows, I was that man when I returned to the Fonda de la Europe and sat down to write to Harry Fane.

The next morning I turned my back upon Cadiz and have never been there since.

IV

The 14th of July was as dull and dismal a day as I ever remember to have seen even in London. It rained from the rising of the sun until the going down of the same. It rained on the just and on the unjust. It rained on the nobleman in his coach and on the beggar in his rags. It rained on Harry Fane, and made him even more than usually cross and dejected, as he jumped out of his hansom cab at the door of my lodgings on the evening of the day in question.

"What, not dressed yet, Will!" was his first exclamation. "The governor has arrived and is expecting us at this moment. I won't go without you," he continued, seeing that I made no movement to get ready; "you've stood by me so long, old fellow, don't desert me now."

"But, Harry," I said, "I shall be quite de trop in your family party. Make my apologies to your father, and tell him I will do myself the honor of calling to-morrow. Come, pluck up, old fellow. This meeting will soon be over, and if a legal separation can be arranged, then hurra for freedom and happiness!"

"Oh! hang it, Neilson! there'll never be any happiness for me in this world again.— But I [illegible] going this evening without you, so drop that cigar, and make [illegible] your beautifying. Perhaps you and my wife will fall in love with each other, and the curtain drop upon virtue rewarded and all that sort of thing, who knows?"

I saw that Harry was becoming so nervous and excited that it would be worse than useless to oppose him, so making a hurried toilet I followed him down stairs, and we drove together to the Clarendon Hotel.

We were shown by the powdered footman to a gorgeous suite of rooms on the first floor and as we entered the ante-chamber, we heard a female voice singing a Spanish ballad with great purity and sweetness.

"Confound her!" muttered Harry between his teeth, "how can she sing at such a time as this?"

Judging from this complimentary remark that my friend's state of mind was not sufficiently serene to risk a meeting with his wife at that moment, I was relieved to find only Mr. Fane in the drawing room, when we entered.

The meeting between the father and son was cordial, even affectionate, and I think Harry's nerves were braced for the coming trial by his father's whispered assurance that he was doing all in his power to secure his son's freedom and happiness and he had every reason to believe with success.

"In the mean time, my dear boy," he said, "show that courtesy and consideration for your cousin which her position and your own dignity demand. You are both so changed in many years that have elapsed since your one brief interview, that I think an introduction would be necessary. My son, allow me to present to you your wife, and my beloved daughter."

There was a light step and the rustle of silk behind us, and with a mighty effort Harry Fane turned and bowed.

At the same moment I raised my eyes and beheld resplendent in full evening dress with jewels sparkling in her hair and on her lovely bosom—the Signorina Angela.

Dinner was announced almost immediately; in a state of bewilderment that bordered closely upon insanity Harry and I followed Mr. Fane and his niece into the dining room. The presence of the servants prevented all conversation of a confidential character during dinner, but I heard enough to convince me that by some miraculous convulsion of nature or special interposition of Providence Harry Fane had found his "Gorgon of a wife" in the woman whom he so passionately adored.

Before the dessert Mr. Fane's carriage was announced, and I gladly accepted his invitation to go with him to the opera, thus leaving the husband and wife to an hour or two of quiet enjoyment and explanation.

It was all talked over in Lady L.'s box that night, and I learned that she had been the originator of the whole scheme and that to her womanly tact its success was mainly owing. During a tour that she had made the previous year through Spain she had looked up her old friend Mr. Fane and spent several days with him at his villa near Cadiz. There she had seen Angela, and had heard the whole story of her marriage and of her husband's persistent determination not to see her or recognize her as his wife. Convinced from the wonderful beauty and attractiveness of the girl that Harry Fane could have no correct knowledge or recollection of her, she conceived and insisted upon carrying out the plot which in its denouement had been productive of such happy results. To complete [illegible] suspicion, should any arise in Harry's mind, the Italian name and origin of the Signorina had been substituted for the Spanish, but his recollection of his wife was so imperfect and his prejudice against her so violent and deep-rooted that to associate her for a moment with the bright dream of love lines who had wound herself so tightly round his heart had never for a moment occurred to him.

"I can scarcely believe that I am living and breathing in the nineteenth century," I said when Lady L. and Mr. Fane had finished their tale; "the story is altogether too romantic for the age we live in. Fifty years hence I shall be telling it to my grand children in my far off western home and they will never believe that I knew all the actors personally and saw the whole drama performed under my very eyes."

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD

Extension Bonds.

[First Mortgage.]

It is [illegible] well known that the Maine Central Railroad [illegible] at Danville Junction and from thence to Portland is a part of the Grand Trunk Railway. For the use of this piece of Road (some 28 miles) the Maine Central pays to the Grand Trunk a rental which for some years past has amounted to some $30,000 per annum. The Maine Central having leased the Portland & Kennebec R. R. and having built its entire Road with its own gauge, [illegible] arrangement has [illegible] to obviate the necessity of using the Grand Trunk Road from Danville [illegible] by building an Extension of its own road from Danville Junction to CUMBERLAND, using the Portland and Kennebec R. R. from there to Portland.

This Extension has already been surveyed and more than three fourths of the requisite grading and all the stone work and masonry completed, and the road will be ready for the iron (already contracted for) in the Spring, and prepared for business soon thereafter. To aid in accomplishing this work the Maine Central Railroad has issued its Bonds to the amount of $550,000, payable in thirty years from October 1st, 1870.

These Bonds are strictly a First and only Mortgage upon the Extension and the Entire line of the Maine Central with all its property (which would readily sell for three times the amount of its Bonded debt) is holden for the payment of the Interest and Principal of these Bonds.

The security is

UNQUESTIONABLE.

A large part of this issue has already been taken in this and other States and the remainder is offered for sale at a price which makes them one of the most desirable investments in the market.

The Bonds bear Interest at the rate of six per cent per annum and both

Principal and Interest payable

IN GOLD.

Free from Government Tax

Coupons Payable in Boston April 1st and October 1st in each Year

When it is considered that by building this Extension the Road can have a complete line of its own through to Portland at an outlay of some $30,000 (gold) per year for interest instead of paying some $30,000 per year rental to another corporation, the commendable economy of the undertaking will be apparent.

The local business alone on the Extension will be profitable besides the advantage to the Road of thus being connected by the same gauge with all the great Railroads of the Country.

Bonds issued in denominations of $500 and $1000 each.

The highest market price will be allowed for Government, State and City Bonds, Bonds of other Railroads and Corporations, and all marketable securities in exchange for above.

It speedily eradicates PIMPLES, SPOTS, SCORBUTIC DRYNESS, INDURATIONS of the CUTANEOUS MEMBRANE, etc., dispels REDNESS and INCIPIENT INFLAMMATION, HIVES, RASH, MOTH PATCHES, DRYNESS OF SCALP OR SKIN, FROST BITES, and all purposes for which SALVES or OINTMENTS are used; restores the skin to a state of purity and softness, and insures continued healthy action to the tissue of its vessels, on which depends the agreeable clearness and vivacity of complexion so much sought and admired. But however valuable as a remedy for existing defects of the skin, H. T. Helmbold's Rose Wash has long sustained its principle claim to unbounded patronage by possessing qualities which render it a TOILET APPENDAGE of the most Superlative and Congenial character, combining in an elegant formula those prominent requisites, SAFETY and EFFICACY—the invariable accompaniments of its use—as a Preservative and Refresher of the Complexion. It is an excellent Lotion for diseases of a Syphilitic Nature, and as an injection for the Urinary Organs arising from habits of dissipation used in connection with the EXTRACTS BUCHU, SARSAPARILLA AND CATAWBA GRAPE PILLS, in such diseases as recommended, cannot be surpassed. PRICE ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Full and explicit directions accompany the medicines.

Evidence of the most responsible and reliable character furnished on application, with hundreds of thousands of living witnesses, and upward of 30,000 unsolicited certificates and recommendatory letters, many of which are from the highest sources, including eminent Physicians, Clergymen, Statesmen, etc. The proprietor has never resorted to their publication in the newspapers; he does not do this from the fact that his articles rank as Standard Preparations, and do not need to be propped up by certificates.

Henry T. Helmbold's Genuine Preparations.
